

Eksamen 6/26en

Spørgsmål 6

Sommer, 2026

Prøvemateriale

Theme: Belonging

Text: Sophie Gonzales, Perfect on Paper (2021) (novel extract)

Instruction: You must make a presentation (roughly 6 minutes) of the text and relate it to the theme. In your presentation, you must

- sum up the main points of the text
- and make a characterisation of the main character.

Bedømmelseskriterier, hf C

Ved den mundtlige prøve lægges der vægt på, at eksaminanden

- behersker et forståeligt og sammenhængende engelsk
- præsenterer og perspektiverer prøvematerialet
- foretager grundlæggende analyse af prøvematerialet med anvendelse af fagets tekstanalytiske grundbegreber
- anvender den viden, der er opnået i arbejdet med det studerede emne.

Der lægges i bedømmelsen vægt på, at eksaminanden kan indgå i uddybende samtale om præsentationen.

Der gives én karakter ud fra en helhedsvurdering af eksaminandens præstation.

Perfect on Paper

Sophie Gonzales

2021

The main character in this text is named Darcy. She's a bisexual female high school student who is a member of the Queer and Questioning Club, which is a club for students who identify as queer. In this passage from the text, Darcy participates in a meeting of the Club. She has been in love with her best friend Brooke for a very long time, but slowly and surprisingly she has found herself falling in love with a new fellow male student, Brougham. Brooke and Darcy haven't spoken together since Darcy tried to break up Brooke and her girlfriend Ray (Raina). In this excerpt Darcy wants to share something with the Q&Q Club.

I was on edge throughout the entire Q&Q Club that Thursday. And given that this meeting was chaired by Finn, who'd been defusing tension since the day he left the womb, that was saying a lot. But something was becoming clear to me. Something that had started as a niggling in the back of my mind, so vague I hadn't had words for it at first. The thing is, I'd 5 wrecked things with Brougham romantically, but even if he was out of the picture, I still had to figure this fear out. Because that's what it was, I was realizing. Fear of multiple things.

[...]

Suddenly, all eyes were on me. And I didn't want to do this, but I knew I had to.

"So," I said. "I've been feeling really... confused, lately. The thing is, I'm... really scared to have 10 feelings for a guy, any guy," I spat out. There. Now I'd said the words out loud, I couldn't deny them to myself if I wanted to. "I'm bi. But the last time I liked a guy, I wasn't part of this group, and being bi wasn't a huge part of my identity. But now it is, and, I guess, I feel weird about it?"

"Weird how?" Finn asked.

15 I swallowed, and scanned the faces staring up at me. No one looked judgy or irritated, even though it felt like such a stupid, trivial thing to bring up. The fear of passing as straight, for god's sake. "I feel like if I'm with a guy, I won't belong here properly anymore. What if I got a boyfriend? I'd feel weird bringing him to Pride events, or even telling queer people I have a boyfriend. I'd feel judged."

20 "Oh my god, Darcy," Jaz said. "We wouldn't judge you."

"You belong," Finn said simply. Brooke nodded, and my breath caught in my throat. It was the first time she'd acknowledged me in person in weeks.

Alexei folded their arms and leaned across the table. "That's all in your head," they said. "You're the only one thinking that, I promise."

25 "No," Ray said sharply, and I turned to look at her. She didn't look angry, but her tone was firm. My stomach dropped. This was what I'd been so terrified of. That I'd open up, and my fears would be reinforced. But then she went on. "Don't gaslight her. What she's describing is internalized biphobia, and bi's didn't invent this shit. Society sends us that message. We're made to feel like we're not queer enough to hang with queer groups all the time."

30 [...]

"Internalized biphobia?" repeated Jason.

Ray didn't skip a beat. "Yeah. It's when bisexuals start to believe the biphobia they're surrounded by. We're told that our sexuality isn't real, or that we're straight if we're with another gender, and that our feelings don't count if we've never dated a certain gender, that kind of 35 crap. Then we hear it so many times we doubt ourselves."

"Yeah," I said. "That's how I feel. I've been told I was 'turning' straight or 'turning' lesbian again depending on which gender I got a crush on. And a little while ago, someone told me it was good I can date guys, because then I don't have to face discrimination."

[...]

40 "And I guess I could technically choose to just never act on my crushes when they're not on a guy, but what the fuck? And the implication is that I'm less queer than others, because, you know, I can just go straight and not deal with any oppression at all, easy. Like being with a guy magically makes me straight. Like it's a competition, or a ranking, and I need to stop speaking on queer issues because am I really queer? Really, though? And I want to clarify
45 that this person didn't say any of that, but that's just how it felt. And maybe I don't know what it's like to be gay or lesbian, but I do know some people will never understand what it's like to be queer and to blush every time you join in on a conversation about it because you feel like you're treading on people's toes, because when they say 'queer' they don't mean you."

50 I hadn't meant to yell.

[...]

Finn slammed his hands on the table, causing Brooke and me, along with a few other members, to jump. He straightened in his seat, looking grave. "Darcy."

"Yes?"

55 He grinned. "You're queer."

Ray nodded. "You're queer."

Brooke looked between us, her lips trembling. "You're queer, Darcy."

"You're queer," Alexei echoed.

"You're queer," Jason.

60 "You're queer," Jaz and Mr. Elliot in unison. Erica whispered it alongside them in a voice too quiet to hear.

"You're queer!" Lily shouted, rising in her seat for emphasis.

[...]

"Even if I'm with a straight guy?" I asked.

65 "Yes."

"Yeah."

"Fuck yes."

"Always."

[...]

70 For the first time, the very very first time, I really believed them. That my relationship status did not change me. And that even if other people didn't agree, every single person in this room had my back without hesitation. I was with them and they were with me and we were with each other. A community within a community within a community. No questions asked. No proof needed. No valid form of identification required.

75 We just belonged because we belonged.

Source: Sophie Gonzales, Perfect on Paper (2021), Hodder & Stoughton (abridged).